The quote "culture eats strategy for breakfast": Do you agree? Why?

Question is an incomplete question. Depending on the definition and alignment, strategy can include culture or contrast culture. This requires culture to adapt or evolve. If not, then strategy fa

Ohne gemeinsamen Teamgeist werden Regeln/Vorgaben ignoriert

I think we need to define strategy first to make sure we are talking about same thing and then see if yes or no, but based on my knowledge it wouldn't definitely true, if we have enough rules

When you say, Culture eats strategy, do you need a strategy anymore? Yes, a simple one. So you can develop innovative ideas and get creative solutions. You only need a frame

I agree when it comes to the point that there's no well established supportive culture. I disagree (or we in the group do), as both are dependent on each other.

Yes, I agree.Strategy is mostly about new things (markets, products, processes, tools,...). New things mean extra effort for changing, which we want to avoid., unless we have a culture that's open to

Culture and strategy should have breakfast together.

Culture is your nature, strategy is only an idea of someone!

The quote "culture eats strategy for breakfast": Do you agree? Why?

People are reluctant to change so driving a strategy that's not backed up by the existent culture will result in a failure, unless the environment is safe for people to step outside of their comfort zone and do it

Strategie ist Theorie - die braucht ein Team welches die Strategie zum Leben bringt. Und die Kultur gibt die "geheimen" Regeln vor

You only can live the strategy, if it is near your culture!

If you know yourself, your culture, you can define your strategy and in the best case it is aligned and you can live it

How does work life feel with a healthy and inspiring culture?

Absolutely will lead to innovations, is it possible?! If yeah, how?

Naturally. I believe this is how it originally was ment to be. But for me there still have to challenges and risks.

When you are early to yourself, you can feel it

If you are inspired your work will it be too
